Launcher app for android free download

Android launcher apps have long been an integral part of the Android experience. If you don't like the way your home screens look or act, you can simply download an app to change them all. There is no doubt that Android launcher apps have a much more diverse set of features than any other kind of app and you can really do some amazing things with these apps. That includes keeping it closer to stock like Google Android or some way out there like Niagara Launcher. Here are the best Android launchers right now! We would list Google Pixel Launcher. However, it is only available for Pixel devices. We recommend Nova, Lawnchair, or Rootless if you want a more pixel-like experience. Read next: Android Launchers comparison: What is the best option for you? LaunchPrice Action: Free /$4.99+ Action Launcher has long been a favorite Android launcher by our readers. It comes with an Android stock feel. However, there are some additional features over top that add some uniqueness. Quicktheme lets you customize your colors based on your monitor. The shutters let you check an app's widget without actually setting one on the home screen. It even has themes and customization elements to make your phone feel more like Android Oreo. There is also icon pack support, frequent updates, and much more. There's a lot to like about it. Even the app drawer is configurable. AIO LauncherPrice: Free/$1.99AIO Launcher makes it different than many Android launcher apps. It does far with the standard home screen in favor of a packed list of things. It shows things like the latest SMS and missed calls, media player, system information (RAM, battery, storage, etc.), and even stuff like news, bitcoin price, Twitter, and more. The paid version also includes integration for Telegram and regular widgets from other apps. Not everything has to look like android stock and AIO Launcher certainly shows that it can be done effectively. It's free for most features. The full version is a very reasonable $1.99.Apex LauncherPrice: Free/$3.99Apex Launcher has been around for a very long time and remains one of the most iconic Android Launcher apps ever. Like Action Launcher, it aims to give an Android stock look and feel with a few extra features thrown in for good measure. These include the ability to modify things like transition animations, scrolling habits, and there is even a scrolling dock where you can put a lot of icons. Apex Launcher also includes a themed engine. The app underwent several major changes in 2018. Show more modern now. APUS LauncherPrice: FreeAPUS Launcher is a fun app if you like a ton of customization. It boasts a collection of over 50,000 wallpapers, along with a ton of extra themes. Some other features include a newsfeed, the ability to hide apps from the app drawer, a built-in app lock feature, and a few other goodies. It's not as easy or effective as Pixel Launcher style launchers as Nova Nova Hyperion, Lawnchair, etc. However, it is much more colorful and flamboyant. Some people prefer it that way. The launcher is free with advertising support. Our only real complaint is that you can't purchase the app to remove ads. Hyperion LauncherPrice: Free /$2.99Hyperion Launcher is the new baby on Android launcher block. It slots in nice between heavier launchers, would be action and Nova and android stock experience of Lawnchair. UI is decided looking stock without a ton of bloating or flair. There are a lot of customization features, though. These include third-party icon support, an icon shape shifter, theme elements, and a few other neat things. It supports Google Feed, but requires a separate download like most other launchers. It's new, but it's already slots in favorably among the best launchers on Android.Lawnchair Launcher 2Price: FreeLawnchair Launcher is an excellent android launcher for fans of minimalism. It's an open source project that mimics much of the look at the Pixel Launcher. It features many features similar to the Pixel Launcher, along with a few others. These features include icon pack support, Google Now integration (with optional and free plugin), adaptive icons, and various other customizations. The original was highly touted for its stock-like appearance, plus its customization features. Developers now list the app as Lawnchair 2 and is still in beta, but includes some more modern Android features. The app is also entirely free. Lightning LauncherPrice: $4.99 + $1.99Lightning Launcher used to be a pretty decent, minimal Android launcher. It has since grown into one of the most customizable Android launchers ever made. It's still super light too. It gives you the opportunity to change virtually anything on the home screen. You can have even more sets of home screens for several occasions. Perhaps its most unique feature is scripting support. You can use JavaScript to make Lightning do all sorts of things. There are also additional plugins, language packs, and more available for download. The list of features is not so much comparative time, but it seems to tick all the boxes right. The app also has a learning curve, but it's worth learning. Microsoft LauncherPrice: FreeMicrosoft Launcher is not a new launcher. The app used to be Arrow Launcher. Microsoft re-marked the app in mid-2017. The app has integration with many Microsoft services, including calendar, email, task list app, and direct integration with Microsoft PCs. It also has customization features and gesture controls. It returned to beta after rebrand. Thus, there are some bugs for now. However, it is something different and especially useful for those who want better integration with their Windows PC. Microsoft is rebuilding this app from the ground up and you can try it here if you want. This new version will likely replace this version of this list in the future when it is officially official LauncherPrice: FreeNiagara Launcher is the newest launcher app on the list and is a kind of diamond-in-the-rough pick. It features a very minimal look with a clean look, excellent ergonomics, and an elegant look. The app also tries to limit the need for notification nuance with integrated message notifications as well as music controls. There are some light theme options available, along with the basic stuff, would be icon pack support. It's still in early access beta right now, so there may be the occasional bug, but if you press the button below and it's not in early access anymore, suppose these bugs are fixed. Nova LauncherPrice: Free /$4.99It doesn't get much better than Nova Launcher. Like Apex Launcher, Nova has been around since the good old days. It remains not only relevant, but one of the best Android launcher app options available. It has a list of customization features that include gesture support, the ability to customize the app's appearance, icon package support, themes, and much, much more. The app also gets updated at a breaking pace, which means that bugs are quickly squished and new features are added constantly. It also comes with the ability to back up and restore home screen layouts for when you finally switch to a new phone. It's the one I'd recommend you try first. OlauncherPrice: Olauncher Free is one of the newest Android launcher apps on this list. It boasts a minimum, fewer than average customizations, and distraction-free use. The app intentionally omits common graphics, such as icons, to minimize the experience. You can set wallpaper and make a few customizations, but that's kind of an idea. You install it, you use it, and you don't get in the way. The app is newer, and the developer is still adding new features. However, this is one of the best minimal style launchers in recent memory. Poco LauncherPrice: FreePoco Launcher is the stock launcher for the popular (and cheap) Pocophone. It's actually available for most Android devices and that's kind of surprising considering Google won't even launch theirs. This is a pretty basic launcher. It has basic Android stock-ish layout with icons on a home screen and a swipe-to-access drawer app. You can customize things like the home screen grid and the background of the app drawer. It also has a privacy option that hides icons in the app drawer if you want. Otherwise, it runs light and smooth. It's an easy recommendation for people with inferior devices and for those with upper end devices who want something very simple. Rootless LauncherPrice: Launcher is a decent Android style launcher, stock of 2018. It's actually a pretty basic experience. You will get an android stock look and feel with some additional customization items to complete the look. Some of the features include icon pack support, adaptive icon pack support, icon shape selector, wallpaper-based themes, and you can change the location of the search bar. Search. can also get Google Feed working on this launcher, but as most it takes an additional download and installation plugin. Website with the instructions for which it is in the Google Play description. This is right up there with Hyperion and Lawnchair as an excellent option for Android stock fans. Smart Launcher 5Price: Free / Up to $6.99Smart Launcher 5 is a big difference from Smart Launcher 3. Fortunately, it is in a positive direction. It features a modern user interface, ambient theme features, modern features, would be adaptive icons, and more. It even has a weather and watch widget and gesture controls. It's not as powerful as Nova Launcher or similar launchers. However, it has enough features to be quite enjoyable. It feels like it competes directly with Action Launcher and similar applications when it comes to customization and usability. Total LauncherPrice: FreeTotal Launcher is not the most popular launcher on the list. However, it's still pretty good. It boasts a very high level of customization, along with various themes and a few other features. However, it also comes with a steeper learning curve than most. Those who stay and learn what they do are treated with something truly special. On the other hand, those who just want something simple that works right may want to try something like CPL, Rootless Launcher, Hyperion Launcher, or one of the other options. If we missed any of the best Android launcher apps, tell us about them in the comments! If Pixel Launcher ever makes it to Google Play, you can bet it will end up on this post rushing list!
